Dear Bernice,

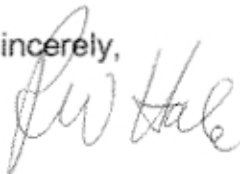

The task of moving one's parent to an assisted living facility is very daunting for many families. Our parents seem to want to hold onto their independence by continuing to live in their own house. When that was just not a good option anymore we looked into assisted living.

My mother is no exception. She felt that way until she realized she would have much more social interaction at the same time keeping her privacy in her own suite at Whispering Knoll than living at her house alone.

I think one of the deciding factors was that we visited there several times. She got comfortable seeing the way of life there. The staff were all genuinely helpful, friendly and accommodating. Many of the residents were friendly and happy to see my mom and seemed quite comfortable living there. The building itself is spacious, cheery, warm and inviting with many areas to socialize in. We never felt pressured to make that big decision and sign up. Mom had plenty of time to think it over and make a choice she was comfortable with.

She is now happy there. She was able to bring some furniture and other items from her house to make her feel more at home in her own new private suite. Her family can visit any time. She is frequently off doing one of the activities provided daily.

Sincerely,

Robert W. Hale
